Please join us for the award-winning ARPAC Institute. ARPAC provides intensive training for faculty committed to incorporating anti-racist pedagogy into their courses; it is not a train-the-trainer program. ARPAC engages faculty in an analysis of systemic racism and provides a conceptual framework focused on anti-racist pedagogy for a rigorous and relevant curriculum. The Institute also provides an ongoing Community of Practice to support faculty, across the curriculum, in their teaching and commitment to anti-racist praxis. In addition, participating faculty are encouraged to develop campus-specific strategies for broader anti-racism organizing across their institutions.

The institute will be led by nationally recognized scholars, Dr. Emily Drew (Willamette University), Dr. Victor Rodríguez (California State University, Long Beach), Dr. Kyoko Kishimoto (St. Cloud State University), and Core Organizer/Trainers from Crossroads Anti-Racism Organizing and Training.

This year, we invite teams of 2-5 faculty per institution to apply for one of two cohorts. For more information and application materials for ARPAC, visit the website:
