About Garvey Commons and Sherburne Hall

The south half of Garvey Commons opened its doors in the fall of 1962, replacing the food service that operated in the basement of Stewart Hall. Enrollment was 5,500 students. During the 1964-65 school year, the north half of Garvey Commons opened and doubled seating capacity to 800.

ARA Services was contracted for food service on the campus in 1962 under director Ray Herringshaw. ARA continues to provide food service to St. Cloud State University today under its present director Jerry Ziebell.

Within a few years, expanding enrollment and an increased demand for on-campus housing squeezed resources at Garvey Commons. It was evident that either Garvey would have to expand and modernize or be replaced. Planning began in the early 1980s to expand at the present site.

In early 1985, the Minnesota State University System board allocated $2.9 million to expand Garvey Commons and construct an additional lounge and concourse linking Garvey to Sherburne Hall, a 500-bed dormitory built in 1969 northwest of Garvey Commons. Construction began in February 1987 and the addition was completed in time to serve students on Sept. 3. Seating capacity in the new facility is 1,100.

Architect for the project was Fredric Wemlinger and Associates. Primary contractor was Donlar Corporation, both of St. Cloud.

Garvey Commons is named for Beth Porter Garvey. She was appointed Dean of Women at St. Cloud State in 1926. She served the university in several positions from 1926 to 1954.
