Any course that is approved as part of the racial issues curriculum must be wholly devoted to issues of race and racism and address four fundamental areas. No percentages are specified for each area, but all must be addressed.

Understanding: A course must examine the concept and meaning of race, ethnicity and oppression.

Education: A course must explore the heritage, culture, and contributions of racial minorities; the impact of racial classification; and the patterns of racial oppression, racial domination and hate crimes in the United States.

Awareness: A course must explore experiences of racial minorities and how members of racial minorities maintain a sense of identity despite persistent and systematic racial oppression and hate crimes.

Student Growth: A course must provide a significant arena for dialogue and/or self-reflection on understanding, education, and awareness.
